A REMARKABLE PONY.

It Is an Affectionate Animal and Shows Almost Human Intelligence.

John C. Krantz, of Baltimore, is the owner of a Western pony in which he takes a great deal of pride. The horse many people desires to subscribe for is named Dick and is one of those pieces of horseflesh which seem to Magazines and Periodicals have almost human understanding. Dick is small enough to go through the small door cut in the stable door for those who desire to renew their subwhich is intended for the entrance of scriptions in connection with the INDEa man. He prefers to enter by the PENDENT. smaller door and sometimes tries to take the carriage to which he is harnessed in with him. This, it is needless to say, results in failure. He considers himself above the common herd, and with good reason.

He will not have his harness put on in the stable, but must be taken into office for that purpose. He then consents to be led out to be hitched to the carriage. Dick is very fond of cream peppermint drops; the ordinary lozenges he will not touch. In order to get these at the end of each drive he is taken to one of Mr. Krantz's stores. His driver then goes in ide for the candies. If he wishes to do so Dick will calmly walk across the pavement and enter the door, much to the amusement of the onlookers and the edification of the children. The sweetmeats are given to the animal and he backs

He always gazes after his master with a look of inquiry in his eyes and puts his fore feet on the pavement when Mr. Krantz leaves the carriage. Mr. Krantz thinks his pet can be taught to do almost anything and if he had the time would try to educate Dick himself. The horse is very fond of his master and on all occasions shows this affection. There is nothing too good for Dick and he evidently deserves it.

His Advice Went for Naught.

The other day there came to New York a young Bostonian who is famous in the Hub as a landscape gardener, and who is also loaded to the guards with the most impressive affectations. He came at the request of a very wealthy express magnate, who has a superb country seat on the Hudson, GOOD POOPLE OF MUISHOUL CO. and who is as proud of it as he was of his first baby. It is renowned for its magnificent stretches of velvety lawns and also for some very fine elm trees, one of the latter which stands alone on the crest of a little knoll being the very apple of its owner's eye. The young Bostonian arrived in the evening and dined with his employer and host and after breakfast the next morning they walked forth together to discuss the prospect for improving the general effects of the view from the front piazzas. With a great display of thoughtful study the young man peered over the landscape, catching angles and other things by raising his hand in front of his eyes and also moving it from right to left as he squinted by its edge. This was kept up in silence for about a minute. Then he said: "Hm-m-m-m! very fair chance here, very fair chance, indeed, for something exceedingly nice to be made of it. Now, the very first thing to go will be that big elm standing there by itself, and—

He got no further in his advice, for magnificent stretches of velvety lawns itself, and-in a cold voice the elder man interrupted him with: "No, you're wrong; you will be the first thing to go, and the train leaves at 9:22. The station wagon will leave ten minutes earlier."

Then he turned and walked away.—

Gambling on his Life.

The gambling instinct is strong in most men, but it is seldom that one hears of a man with sufficient nerve to bet a sum of money on his own life.

A wager of this kind has just leaked out in which two promine t members of a Philadelphia club are concerned. yer, who had previously en oved the best of health, began to complain of feeling run down. He consulted his friend, the doctor, who, after a minute, thorough examination, told him frankly his lungs were affected, the action of his heart was impaired and that he wouldn't live a year. The lawyer, who is a man of indomitable pluck and who is a man of indomitable pluck and will power, was naturally stunned for a moment. After the first shock had passed off his true nature asserted itself. "I'll bet you $1,000 you are wrong and that I do live over one year," he exclaimed. The doctor was positive his diagnosis was correct and was forced to accept the bet. The money was placed in a safety deposit vault and the lawyer went abroad. In six months he returned. The year was up last week and he won his wager. And what is more, he says he is open for more bets of a similar nature.—Philadelphia Record.

C. L. MORRIS,

Wonderful Richness of Siberia. Considering the fecundity of the Siberian mountains and rivers in respect to colored precious stones, it would seem as if nature had, in a cynical moment, wreaked vengeance on this portion of the earth by making it hideous, yet rich beyond compare. With all the marvelous mineral products, the porphyry, the blue and green jasper, granite, red, rose-colored and blue quartz, chalcedony, lapis lazuli topaz, beryl, aquamarine, and crystals attaining two inches in diameter filling these terrible mines and soil, who would wish to own any portion of it? No wonder the palaces of St. Petersburg are splendidly embellished from such teeming quarries, or that the rich nobility spend thousands of versts for articles that can only be manufactured in the dark Altai Mountains. Siberia to the Russians is merely a magnificent territory products, the porphyry, the blue and sians is merely a magnificent territory of unbounded wealth, and a vast prison house for the criminal and 'nihilist. No sentiment is wasted on the country. -Boston Herald.
